“Trade Secrets – Understanding Security Measures in the Finance Industry”

Featuring

Natalie Remington, J.D.

Associate
Quarles & Brady, LLP

US Federal law, as well as many state laws, have statutes specifically directed at protecting trade secrets. These statutes impose civil and criminal liability for misappropriation of trade secrets. It is critical for employers to be well-versed in this area of the law so they can take the required and necessary steps to protect their trade secrets. It is equally important for employees to be well-versed in this area of the law so they do not inadvertently run afoul of the law and subject themselves to civil and criminal penalties. This presentation will offer guidance to both employer and employees on this critical topic.

Speaker's Bio:

Natalie Remington is an associate in the Milwaukee office of Quarles & Brady, LLP, who practices in the area of Commercial Litigation. Natalie has represented companies in various stages of trade secret litigation, assisting her clients in their attempts to remedy theft of their trade secrets. Her experience litigating trade secret cases has underscored for her the importance of establishing meaningful measures to prevent theft in the first instance, and to educate current and potential employees on their duties under relevant trade secret laws.
